

SEDA Workshop

Turning a Conference Presentation into a Publication

Wednesday 10th June 2009, 10am to 4pm

Woburn House, London

This workshop will look at practical suggestions for making the most out of conference presentations, particularly those from May 2009's SEDA Spring Teaching, Learning and Assessment Conference, and turning them into viable potential publications.

How many successful conference presentations do you have left hanging around - reminding you that they should be published?

Conference presentations are often used for leading edge work in progress - the ideas, the innovations, the research and the discoveries on which you have been working most recently. Some conference presentations are an opportunity to try out speculative thoughts and involve those who come to the workshop session, the seminar or paper, as a sounding board for the usefulness of the ideas and arguments.

Some conference presentations never see the light of day or the darkness of print even though they have taken months of hard work to develop both in terms of the underpinning research, and the organising and wording for presentation.

We shall be looking at:

- Developing conference presentations with a view to publication right from the start
- Turning speculative and developmental presentations and material into rigorous and well expressed papers
- Rediscovering, dusting down and turning older conference papers into a publishable form
- Seeking the right publication outlets and writing for them.

Please come along with ideas about conference papers from the SEDA conference or elsewhere, which you might like to write or rewrite, and if you can, even bring the papers with you. Some of the time will be spent writing/rewriting.

This workshop will be facilitated by Professor Gina Wisker, Head of the Centre of Learning and Teaching at the University of Brighton and Dr Celia Popovic, Head of the Educational Staff Development Unit at Birmingham City University.

The fee is £95.00 and includes refreshments and lunch. To register please complete the form overleaf and return to the SEDA Office.
