

SEDA Seminar

Supporting new academic managers and leaders: sharing expertise and ideas between Human Resources and Educational Development Staff

Thursday 17th July 2008
10am – 4pm
Room G17
Nuffield Learning Centre
Birmingham University

Many academics become managers, running academic programmes, project teams and departments. With an increasing expectation of and emphasis on the management aspect, institutions are faced with the challenge of providing effective staff development to support staff in these roles. Some Universities are using the UK Professional Standards Framework to both support and reward staff in such roles or action learning sets while others have created leadership modules, sometimes as part of a Post Graduate Certificate in Learning and Teaching or a leadership and management programme. This event will bring together staff across HR and Educational Development to share expertise and explore models of CPD and HR processes for developing academic managers and leaders. It will particularly examine:

- incentives for engagement with management and leadership CPD
- building on our knowledge of what works in academic staff development
- strategic approaches to academic management and leadership
- possible tensions between standards, processes, development and academic roles
- the HR and educational development interface

Our exploration and sharing of examples will be informed by both research and experience. Discussions will be led by Julie Hall with presentations from Corony Edwards and Rach Kynaston who have both been involved in developing innovative structures for CPD in academic management and leadership. The afternoon will include a presentation on the SEDA Professional Development Framework. This will explore with participants how HR and strategic objectives can be addressed for staff across different roles and functions, and provide an opportunity to ask questions and consider how colleagues can use PDF as a tool for supporting and rewarding Initial and Continuing Professional Development.

The fee is £60 per person (to include refreshments and lunch). To register please complete the form overleaf and return it to the SEDA Office.
